

WidePoint Signs $2 Million Line of Credit With Cardinal Bank

Tuesday, August 21, 2007

FAIRFAX, Va. -- WidePoint Corporation (AMEX: WYY), a leading provider of information technology assurance and identity management services, today announced that the company entered into a revolving senior line of credit with Cardinal Bank for up to $2 million dollars.

The revolving senior line of credit will provide the company with additional capital resources to fund liquidity requirements for future contract awards and bolster its capital resources to fund the growth of its operations. The interest rate on the revolving senior line of credit is variable and based upon the prime lending rate with a term through September 1, 2008.

WidePoint CFO Jim McCubbin said, "This new line of credit with Cardinal Bank will assist us in further strengthening our financial capabilities in anticipation of several initiatives we are pursuing. The line of credit, while not presently required by the Company, establishes a cost effective financial vehicle to fund our businesses through periods of rapid expansion and allows us to fund opportunistic growth situations. Cardinal Bank has considerable experience as a preferred lender to growing companies in the federal market. We are pleased with this expansion of our relationship with Cardinal Bank and look forward to their assistance and financial expertise as we continue to expand our relationship in the future. We look forward to keeping our shareholders updated on the activities this facility will enable us to pursue."

Cardinal Bank SVP Sushil Clarence stated, "WidePoint was seeking a bank with knowledge of the federal marketplace, product sophistication and a higher level of personal service. As a community bank, we at Cardinal are very pleased to be the financial partner of choice for a public company such as WidePoint."
